What is Classification

Classification, which literally means classification, is a type of supervised learning supervised learning, which is a process of identifying the category relationship of existing data and determining the category of newly observed data on its own.

Strength: If it is discrete, we can use classification to explore data. Classification is powerful when we should group data.

Weakness: Training data is so important that it can end up the prediction like overfitting problem

Classification

I chose a data set of gender and name with probability from here

The reason I used this data is that I wanted to know how classification works if there are too many categories. there are so much names in the world, so i will only use [1:10k] of row from the data

library(readr)
df <- read_csv("name_gender_dataset.csv")

Rows: 147269 Columns: 4
-- Column specification -----
Delimiter: "," ## chr (2): Name, Gender
dbl (2): Count, Probability
i Use `spec()` to retrieve the full column specification for this data.
i Specify the column types or set `show_col_types = FALSE` to quiet this message.
#data cleaning

df <- df[1:10000,]

Dividing into test and train set

This code divides df into training and test the data set into 80/20 Train/Test by randomly sampling the rows.

set.seed(1234)
i <- sample(1:nrow(df), nrow(df)*0.80, replace=FALSE)
train <- df[i,] test <- df[-i,]

data exploration

In this section, I will use 5 functions for each train and test for data exploration

1. `dim()`: check number of observation and variables
2. `head()`: see the first 6 of the data set
3. `str()`: check data structure and type
4. `summary()`: check frequency of base statistics
5. `apply()`: check number of NA values of each columns by na using `apply+2+sum`

dim(train)

```
[1] 8000    4

dim(test)
```

```
[1] 2000    4

head(train)

plotting 2 graphs from training data

build a logistic regression model

glm1 <- glm(Gender~., data= train, family="binomial")
summary(glm1)

glm tooks too long time (waited 2 hours but didn't work) to classify data because there are 10k of different names in the dataset.

plenty of categories makes hard to run the code.

build naive bayes model

Then how about naive bayes model?

library(e1071)
nb1 <- naiveBayes(Gender~., data=train)
nb1

It worked faster than `glm()`.

evaluate on the test data

Since `glm` didn't work properly, I will use `nb` model only.

strenght and weakness of Naive Bayes and logistic regression

NB: The Naive Bayes classifier can be trained very efficiently in a supervised learning environment, and has the advantage of a very small amount of training data to estimate the parameters required for classification.

However, this method has a weakness in that it makes a naive assumption that all implementations will be independent.

Logistic regression:

If we want to expect the event, LR is powerful since it shows the relationship between its attributes.

However, like I did, if there are so many different categories, it might be hard to take result in time.

benefits drawbacks

In my test, `glm` didn't worked. Therefore, I cannot say much about logistic regression. I should have found another way to do logistic regression with my dataset, like extract characteristics from names to reduce the amount of categories.
